Abstract This collection covers Georgetown University's International Student Exchange Program with particular interest in the Central American Scholarship Program from the 1970s to the 1990s. The programs were spearheaded by Father Harold Bradley, S.J with the hopes of educating students in trade skills so that they may return to further develop their home country. The International Student Exchange Program was put in place to acquire students from around the world while the Central American Scholarship Program was put in place particularly to financially aid students from Central America and the Caribbean. This process also involved other institutes of higher education throughout the country including both universities and community colleges. Documents in this collection include but are not limited to correspondence, spreadsheets, plans, statistic reports, travel logs, travel brochures, itineraries, surveys, photos, financial records, memos, newspaper clippings, résumés, bills, interim reports, and meeting minutes.

Biographical/Historical note

Father Harold Bradley, S.J was responsible for the startup of both the International Student Exchange Program and the Central American Scholarship Program at Georgetown. He however was only the head of the Central American Scholarship Program. Harold Bradley, S.J also went to Congress to obtain funds for both programs and he is responsible for the research done prior to the founding of both programs. He staffed both programs to an extent, taught classes at Georgetown University, and was very well liked by the students and faculty alike.

Scope and Contents note

This collection centers around Georgetown University's International Student Exchange Program and the Central American Scholarship Program. The Central American Scholarship Program exists in conjunction to the International Student Exchange Program by offering Central American students funding to participate in the exchange program. While both programs are operated out of Georgetown University in Washington D.C., the programs themselves actually are implemented in various institutions of higher education throughout the U.S. Both programs are projects of Father Harold Bradley, S.J who used his connections throughout the Jesuit community to recruit students for the programs. He is also responsible for the research prior to the programs' implementation and for obtaining the funds from Congress for the programs. The collection is based on papers from Father Harold Bradley's point of view however there are also papers from staff members, students, and host families of the exchange students. Through the exchange program students were able to study trade skills in addition to required courses of a college curriculum. This was done in effort to get the students to return home having obtained skills and knowledge that would be useful to further develop their country.
