How an Iraqi refugee and a Trump supporter became unlikely friends — and changed each other's minds

13 media placements, the Baltimore Sun, NBCBaltimore; NBC-Philadelphia, and CBS-Chicago

• Two national media placements: Buzzfeed and Mic.com

• A media reach of more than 25 million

• Social media reach of 1.8 million users and more than 399,000 engagements
For example, Maggie Anderson, a prolific Trump supporter who shared her views against refugees widely on social media, changed her stance and even her course of study after meeting Bnyad, an Iraqi refugee.

Maggie now plans to become an immigration lawyer. Bnyad was also positively surprised by his reaction to Maggie and has been sharing his experience with the campaign at various events around the country.

All other participants had similar reactions: surprised by their own misconceptions about each other.

The story of Maggie and Bnyad was so compelling, PBS’ Amanpour & Company aired a 16-minute interview segment with the two of them. The show also airs globally on CNN International, the most widely distributed news channel in the world, reaching over 354 million households.
